Process of Mind: The absence of a mind with ipseity (individual identity).

DEPARTMENT OF RESEARCH FOUNDATION 'S MAS i MANJON

Introduction.

This is the presentation of the theory of mental process, refutes theory that the mind as a individual identity (ipseity). The mental process supports the experimental scientific method.

Introducing process theory of mind.

Materials and Methods.

Examination process experimental method (in all variables of the method)

The materials required electroencephalography systems and most advanced virtual models available.

Results.

Try experimentally the existence of a mental process and refuting the idea of a mind with ipseity.

Introducing process of the mind theory.

The process of the mind is a continuous construct (fluid and constant in its construction). Composed of fragments or packets of information (subjective and objective perceptual). Each fragment or packets of information based or pauses the subsequent fragments or packets.

The process supports the experimental method in all its variables, showing robust theory.

The mind as a something with ipseity has no real existence, does not support the analysis of the variable in the experimental refutation.

No sustains a mind like an individual identity, for there is nothing in it that can justify (except in an abstract idea of semi-religious character, which is unacceptable from the experimental method).

The mental process has products and byproducts, such as an identity (ego) which is a byproduct of the mental process, will be considered later all productions of the mental process by correlating its expression and activity).

BEHAVIORAL OBSERVATION

Consideration of all factors perceptive, cognitive, that make up, the mental process
